

The move to weaken the Indiana law regarding telemarketers by supplanting it with a federal law that is less comprehensive is quite worrisome. After having signed on to the Attorney General's list of no call households our telephone intrusions have been significantly reduced. As a mother with two small children, and a graduate student I have minimal amounts of time to deal with telemarketers and have appreciated greatly how much more pleasant it is to be at home either with the kids or studying. I know now that when the phone rings it is likely to be someone with whom I want to converse.
